

A small bird with a black head and back, and a white body with a reddish-brown patch on its side, is perched on a dark brown branch. The background is a soft-focus green with pink blossoms in the foreground. The bird is facing left.

Hope is the thing with feathers that perches in the soul, and sings the tune
without the words and never stops at all.

Emily Dickinson